2.0 CITIZEN COMMENTS

2.1 There were no citizen comments.

3.0 Public Comment: Proposed Planned Development District (PDD) Zoning Ordinance.

3.1 Community and Economic Development Director Brian Berndt presented the proposed ordinance explaining that this creates an opportunity for creation of a specialized zoning classification. Property owners within the designated areas may apply for creation of a new zone should the type of development they desire be compatible with the requirements of the PDD (planned development district), subject to recommendation by the planning commission and approval by the city council as in any other re-zone request. The proposed Ordinance was approved by the Planning Commission and reformatted by City Attorney Shane Topham to be more consistent with the current zoning code.

Mayor Cullimore stated that the Council wants to wait for public comment and review all of the information and the final draft in order to provide staff with additional feedback. Staff indicated that they already have held several meetings with interested parties, including representatives of CH Voters who indicated general support for the ordinance, but concern over possible density and height issues in select areas of the gravel pit. Other groups with whom staff has met included, residential and commercial property owners in the affected areas, Business Association, developers, architects, builders, planners and general public.

The Council was again reminded that the ordinance as now presented only adds the option for land owners to apply for creation of a new zoning classification within the "guardrails" of the PDD chapter. While it does encourage certain types of development, it must also go through rigorous review before approval, including public hearing, recommendation by the planning commission, and approval or disapproval by the Council, in the same manner as any other re-zone application. Unlike the "administrative" process where under a conditional use permit must be granted if mitigations are implemented to address negative impacts, however, creation of a special zone for property in a PDD is entirely legislative, giving the city more control over whether or not the application ultimately must be approved. Staff also believes that the PDD process will do a more thorough job of defining exactly what is being approved in that all material aspects of the proposed development will be detailed in the specialized zone that is created for the property. Staff believes that enacting this ordinance will only add the PDD process to the options available for land owners to select, but will not entitle any applicant to approval of its proposal.

3.2 Mayor Cullimore opened the public comment period. No comments were given and the public hearing was closed.
